

Brava!

Nika Annabella, a recent high school graduate, was diagnosed with Turner Syndrome at 13 years. She was a high-level competitive gymnast for 10 years coached by UCLA coaches and was very successful and set to continue gymnastics into college. Nika retired gymnastics due to the onset of Osteopenia and Madelung's Deformity in the wrist all complications from Turner Syndrome.

She found her voice in performing arts and began singing opera, classical and took that training to work well in musical theater. She participated in 42 productions in three years; opera, classical, and musical theater shows, getting nominations and wins for best actress in a musical in the Cappies and Macy's awards.

She was accepted to nine universities and chose UC Davis in California for pre-medical and will also minor in music. Nika is graduating with academic distinction and 3 scholarships.

Congratulations and best of luck , Niki, in all you do!
